"When the war broke out," said he, "I was a puny boy of seventeen years, one of the sickly kind not worth their feed. I lived in Waterville, and enlisted with the famous Waterville-College company. I was so inferior a fellow physically that they set out not to take me, but I was bound to go, and eleven others said they would go if I went, and would stay at home if I did not go. So I went to the front with the Third Maine regiment of infantry, and November, 1861, found me in Camp Howard, Alexandria, Va. The camp was named for General O. O. "Well, one day while we were in camp at Alexandria we were ordered out to Fairfax Courthouse on a short expedition, and I took cold. I aggravated it by lying on the damp ground after my return, and the next thing I was stricken with diphtheria. Some of my chums had me removed to the hos-pital-tent, and told the officers that I ust have all done for me that care and ev could do. "They were very good to me, but I grew worse. A great sac formed on my throat. It grew so large that I could see it as I lay in my cot, and it protruded from under my chin. I be-came speechless, and remained in a sort of stupor. I could hear, and was dimly cognizant of what was going on around me. My face at last swelled so that I could not use my eyes, and was practically blind. The surgeons, Dr. McCrure, of Bangor, and Dr. Hildreth, of Gardiner, told me I must die. I took a ring off my finger and told my comrades to send it homto my mother. I sent a dying message to her, and awaited death. I was reconciled, and in my semi-unconscious state quite comfortable. I suffered no son named Harry, who is an invalid. On Friday night last her husband said deeper into the stupor. I heard them say I was dying. I had lingered along until it was now in January, 1862. Dr. McCrure took hold of my wrist one day, threw it down after trying to feel my pulse, and I heard him say : 'The is dead; his pulse has stopped. Take him out.'

"I could not make a sign or a noise but I had sense enough remaining to think of my jack-knife. I thought they would wrap me up in my blanket and bury me, and it popped into my head that I might dig my way out with my jack-knife, although how I was to do it, not being able to move a muscle, I can't

My friends gathered around me, and I heard their expressions of grief. The time was set for my funeral. The compaby was drawn up, and the chaplain Rev. Mr. Leonard, who preached in Bangor before and after the war, prayed and made brief remarks. The regretary was not enjoyed by me, but my mind was so much dulled that I did not fully realize the danger of my situ-

How Boys' Marbles Are Made. [Scientific American.]

Almost all the "marbles" are made at Oberstein, Germany. There are large agate quarries and mills in that neighborhood, and the refuse is made into marbles. The small blocks of stone are thrown into the hopper of a mill, formed of a bedstone having its surface grooved with concentric furrows. Above this is the "runner," which is of some hard wood having a level face on its lower surface. It takes about fifteen minutes to finish a bushel of good marbles, ready for the boys' knuckles. One mill will turn out 160,-000 marbles per week.

Annie first took care of Mrs. Clingman and her three children on the fourth floor, and conducting them to the fire-escape, helped her brother take one child under each arm, while one hung around his neck. She then saw the Silberman family from the attic safe down the fire-escape under the care of firemen, and also guided to it Mrs. Murphy from the fourth floor, who was leading her blind aister down-stairs, and Jeremiah Murphy, who could barely hobble. Annie was the last to go down the fire-escape with her brother. One man get out on the roof, and one woman crawled to a window, and they were taken down on ladders.
